Susan,

There is no question as to the success that is being enjoyed by the chess program at Tech. This success is directly the result of your and Paul's leadership, skill, and efforts. Therefore, it is not completely surprising that other colleges or universities would approach the two of you to help elevate their collegiate chess efforts as well.

Based on the information you have provided (attached Staff positions), and our rough estimate (attached SPICE budget) as to what the offer could represent in actual annual funding, President Bailey has authorized the following counter:

- 10% increase in salary for you and Paul Troung, respectively.
- An additional $100,000 in scholarship support (totaling $130,000, annually)

You have suggested several options (SPICE Proposal- Option 2, see attached) including, Option 1: matching the current offer you have received, Option 2: a modified partnership, and Option 3: elimination of Spice. Related to #3, I can tell you very directly that I have heard of nothing that would lead me to believe that the Chess Program at TTU would not continue. I believe that at this junction, some indication from you regarding the offer above should be reached, before alternative "options" are considered.

At this point, I will wait to hear from you.

Warmly,

Juan Sanchez Muñoz, Ph.D.

Juan,
Per our earlier conversation, enclosed is option 2 of the SPICE proposal, which would save Tech about $100,000 while maintaining the SPICE name, the program, and most of the benefits. In this scenario, I will be coming to Tech 2-3 times each semester to train the SPICE players while handling other described duties. Tech will still receive the benefits of having my name and presence to continue SPICE at a much lower cost. It may be a good compromise if Tech cannot match the other offer.

Please feel free to contact me if you have further questions.

Susan

Best wishes,
Susan Polgar

Why is SPICE important to Texas Tech?

Chess is one of the biggest sports in the world. The World Chess Federation (FIDE) has over 170 member nations, which is second only to the World Soccer Federation (FIFA). The bi-annual World Chess Olympiad is second in size only to the Summer Olympics, and larger than the Winter Olympics. According to statistics, there are over 700 million chess players worldwide, and more than 45 million in the United States.

Even though chess is a recognized sport by the International Olympic Committee (IOC - www.olympic.org), it is widely considered one of the greatest educational tools, especially for young people. Through Susan Polgar's worldwide and nationwide celebrity status in the enormous chess community, Texas Tech University has received a tremendous amount of visibility and positive publicity. Through Susan Polgar and SPICE, Texas Tech University developed an effective way to recruit top notch students domestically and globally.

In only its first year competing in Division I in 2010, the Texas Tech Knight Raiders Chess Team, which was built from the ground up by Susan, stunned the chess world by making the College Chess Final Four, and finishing third in the country, ahead of big name universities such as Harvard, Yale, Princeton, Stanford, University of Chicago, New York University, University of Texas, and Washington University in St. Louis, etc.

In its second year in Division I in 2011, the team shocked the chess world once again by winning the Final Four. Susan became the first woman in history to lead a Men's Division I team to the National Championship. This made big news in the media worldwide. SPICE can become the most dominant chess program in the United States for decades to come with proper support.

The Texas Tech Knight Raiders are currently the number one ranked team in the nation, and is the favorite to make the Final Four once again. For the first time in school history, a new subject proposed by Texas Tech, the Chess Puzzle Solving, was accepted by UIL.

In addition to running the SPICE program and training the Knight Raiders, Susan also organized world class chess events, which provided Texas Tech an exceptional amount of positive publicity. The annual SPICE Cup, the most prestigious international chess invitational in this country, and the highest rated tournament in U.S. history, can draw more than 30 million followers through the national and international media, as well as online coverage. The Susan Polgar Girls' Invitational (SPGI), the most important annual national chess invitational for girls (one top girl per state plus various qualifiers, may eventually be expanded to one girl per country), as well as other tournaments, also brought huge publicity for Texas Tech.

SPICE, however, is at a crossroad and a clear direction is needed. There are 3 possible options:

1. To expand the operation to be able to compete with other top universities in recruiting world class talents, winning national titles, and bringing Texas Tech even more national and international media attention and recognition.
2. To scale down the operation with smaller budget, teams, and staff, just enough to maintain SPICE at an adequate level.
3. To completely eliminate SPICE.
